Acknowledgments

This is where you should thank your thesis advisor, your fellow students, who worked on the projects with you and were a big part of your studies, your family, and whoever else you want. You should also point out any funding agencies that contributed through scholarships or grants that funded the work.

Abstract

This is a template for writing a Thesis. It includes a general outline for a thesis that could be followed. The English and Hebrew front pages and the Hebrew abstract are typeset from the `.tex` files under AuxiliaryPages when you compile with LuaLaTeX (on Overleaf: Menu, Compiler, LuaLaTeX). Fill in the title, author, advisor and date macros at the top of `main.tex`. If you must use pdfLaTeX, update the `.docx` files there instead, save them as PDF and point the `\includepdf` commands at them.

Note that the abstract for a thesis or research proposal is much more extensive than the short abstract for an article. It should be approximately 1 page long and really be an executive summary of the proposal, including some background, presenting the problem, and explaining how you propose to address it. Don't forget to point out your achievements, such as the number of papers that you published.

Chapter 1

Introduction

This is the introduction chapter [1]. Here is an Example (EXMP) of how to define an acronym.

Chapter 2

Background

This is the background chapter.

Chapter 3

Thesis Content

From this chapter and on, you should present the content of your thesis. Note that it is often nice to include each chapter as a separate .tex file, using the `\include{filename}` option. You can reduce the compile time of your paper by adding `\includeonly{filename}` in the options. This will only output the content of the selected file, but will retain the full file's numbering and everything.

Summary and Conclusions

Here you should conclude your work and don't forget to again emphasize your achievements (e.g., publications).

תקציר

לכתוב פה תקציר לעבודה.

לוודא שהתקציר בעברית תואם את התקציר באנגלית!

להקפיד לסיים עם הישגי התיזה (למשל כמה מאמרים פורסמו על סמך המחקר)

תוכן עניינים:
